The conference theme

Ethics in Counter-terrorism

In previous decades, many European armed forces have frequently had to participate in counter-terrorist or anti-insurgency operations while abroad. However, for many of these armed forces, counter-terrorist operations in their home country are a relatively new phenomenon. Of course, exceptions exist, such as Northern Ireland or the Basque country, but these have been relatively unusual, rather than the norm. Armed and uniformed soldiers can now be seen patrolling the streets in many European countries, doing work which is, in some respects at least, comparable to that of the civilian police.

What are the ethical implications of this phenomenon? To what extent does it change the relationship between the soldier and the democratic state? Do emerging surveillance technologies encroach on democratic freedoms? Where do we place the boundary between privacy and security? Does the use of the military at home re-define the relationship between the police and the military? Under what conditions can soldiers, who are trained to achieve victory by force of arms – including killing where necessary – be used effectively in crowded city-centres? What does this imply for the training of soldiers? Conversely, do we also risk over-militarising our police forces?

To what extent are hard won fundamental freedoms, such as passport free travel within the Schengen area of Europe, being deliberately and systematically undermined and exploited by terrorists? Or are we all allowing our lives to be changed too much by groups whose real capability lies in their capacity to spread fear, more than their actual capabilities?

At our conference in Norway, we intend to discuss these and many other ethical questions raised by the military’s role in counter-terrorism. It is a topic that is as important as it is topical, so we anticipate a particularly stimulating and enlightening conference.

This year’s conference is supported by the Defence Academy of Norway and the Norwegian Armed Forces Chaplaincy. Euro-ISME is very grateful for their active support, and for access to the excellent facilities of the Defence Academy.
Practical information

Registration is now open. You will find a registration form in this information pack. You will also find an application for individual membership of Euro-ISME. Please note that if you are not already a member, you can sign up now and save 10€ on the combined conference fee and membership. The conference fee for non-members is 230€ and for members 180€. Annual membership costs only 40€.

Our plenary sessions will be held in the historic Fanøhallen within the grounds of the Akershus Fortress in Oslo.

The Fortress is within easy walking distance of the two city centre hotels with which we have negotiated special rates for those attending our conference. Both hotels are also conveniently within walking distance of the main Oslo railway station. A dedicated airport express train will transport you there you from Gardemoen International Airport in about 30 minutes.

The conference dinner, preceded by a drinks reception, will be held on Monday 23 May at the Thon Hotel Opera. At the dinner we shall have the pleasure of presenting the 2015 Euro-ISME award for ethics to the NGO Geneva Call.
